Night after night, a young boy looks out his window, but nothing he sees frightens him. Then one night...
It Didn’t Frighten Me

by Janet L. Goss and Jerome C. Harste
Illustrated by Steve Romney
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, an orange alligator up in my tree!
But . . . that orange alligator didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a purple witch up in my tree!
But . . . that purple witch didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a silver tiger up in my tree!
But . . . that silver tiger didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a pink dinosaur up in my tree!
But . . . that pink dinosaur didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a green goblin up in my tree!
But . . . that green goblin didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a white unicorn up in my tree!
But . . . that white unicorn didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a golden gorilla up in my tree!
But . . . that golden gorilla didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a blue bear up in my tree!
But . . . that blue bear didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a red rhinoceros up in my tree!
But . . . that red rhinoceros didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a giant spotted snake up in my tree!
But . . . that giant spotted snake didn’t frighten me!
One pitch black, very dark night, right after Dad turned off the light, I looked out my window only to see, a big brown owl up in my tree!
And did it ever frighten me!
Night after night, a young boy looks out his window, but nothing he sees frightens him. Then one night…